It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll

Bruised Fruit (Poem by Myself) (04/23/21)

Fear

is my constant companion.

An urgency

for authority

over every outcome of my existence.

For a circlet

upon my brow

branding me invincible,

and abstracting

from the soft spongy places

that refuse to ever heal.

An apple

marred and neglected in the dirt.

My truest core forbidden and spurned.

Resented for factors

outside of my influence-

the mistakes of others.

But I am no mistake.

Weaving wit and magic

Like cloth on a loom.

The broken pieces

molded together

with gold and starlight.

My luminescence

Shining against the empyrean black.

Fallen.,

Yet I rise.

A masterpiece,

only understood

by the most careful observer.

Cloaked within a masquerade laced with truth.

I guard my heart here.

Bruised fruit.

A cutesy, wittle wabbit? Oh, come on, you couldn't handle this yourselves?

GIF by tedosterone

- Blue Exorcist - Rin learns that he's the half-human/half-demon son of Satan, and that his adoptive family are professional demon-fighting Exorcists. Identity-hiding, identity reveals, angst and acceptance!

GIF by underreadedbook

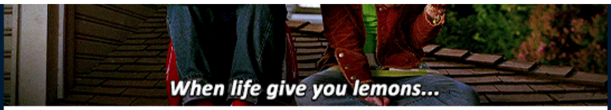
- Sky High (2005) - The son of two of the world's strongest heroes, Will enrolls at a school for supers despite having no powers of his own.



When life give you lemons...

GIF by movie-gifs

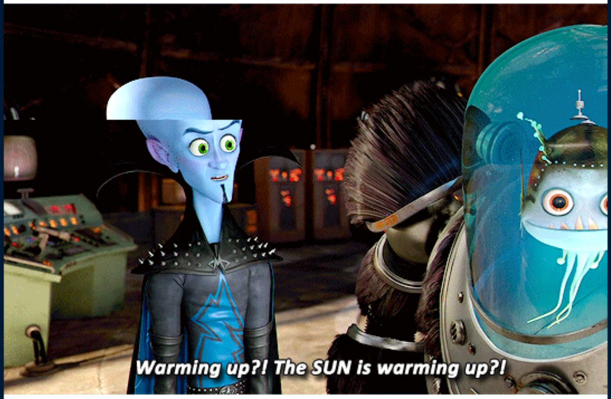
- Megamind - Yes it's on another list! Jam-packed with superhero tropes and questions of fitting in with humanity, but the film never takes itself too seriously.



Warming up?! The SUN is warming up?!

GIF by tvandfilm

- The Dragon Prince - A story of two human half-brothers, the elf assassin originally sent to kill them, a dragon's egg, and a world on the edge of war. Also a very grumpy pet toad. And interspecies romance!

GIF by bidragonprince

- Trollhunters - Jim wishes for adventure and finds a magic amulet that chooses him as the next Trollhunter, tasked with protecting the hidden society of trolls safe from dangerous factions of troll-kind.

I'm going to let you give the definitive answer. If someone out there has a crush on Loki, what does that say about them?
Wow! Erm... I don't know.

He's quite a cocktail of characteristics.

Playful. Disruptive.

Mischievous.

I suppose... he's fun, he's witty, he's charming. He's quite dangerous though.

And behind all of that charisma there's something quite broken and fragmented...

...and isolated. And very resistant,

So I wonder if getting close to him might be...

It might be a tricky experience.

You know, there might be a bit of push and pull.

> 'I came across a quiz about what your Marvel crush says about you, and a lot of the answers are pretty obvious. But Loki wasn't an option on the quiz, which I found fascinating because I know for a fact how many men and women love, love. love yourself, and Loki.'

I haven't read all of his comics or anything, but I've seen enough to wonder how much some others have read. I've occasionally seen posts where people are upset that Loki isn't as subtle in the new series trailers as he normally is, because "he's just not that type of person." Or that Tom is overdoing it. And to be honest, there are definitely times in the comics where he actively chooses not to be less subtle. He's still a trickster, he's still always got something up his sleeve, but he is not always subtle either.

Correct me if I am wrong, but I think some people saw the first two Thor films and decided that's all Loki was. Like, he's chaos, constantly changing, never always quite the same. Plus, are we forgetting that this is an alternate Loki at this point? He's not SUPPOSED to be the same as the one before. He's going to grow and develop in ways you're not familiar with, or at the very least, not the same as before.

Also, "subtle" my ass. Sure, he has the capacity to be subtle, and often is depending on mood and situation, but c'mon. His original helmet should have been enough to suggest he carries a certain lack of subtlety. How is that subtle? Explain to me how a horned helmet that's heavy enough to break a human neck just by existing on a person's head equals subtle.

I just really get frustrated when people get mad about his character changes, without realizing how much he changes between comics, when that's literally the point of the fucking show. The point is to go over the many facets of the man, not box his character into a cookie cutter being. And that's what people have been doing with him for years.

Hell, even in original mythology he's not someone we can just pin down and decide "that's Loki." Which is the POINT.

plus i wanna add that we saw only one glimpse of Loki in the first two Thor movies and in Avengers. We never saw Loki when he's comfortable, when he's not angry, when he's not dealing with trauma, when he's on his own without Asgard, Thor or Odin. We have seen only one side of his character and that's what i'm thrilled to see in the series: Loki's entire personality and his whole range.

adhdhufflepuffonsstuff

Exactly. And in the comics, when he's truly comfortable, he's kind and affectionate. Hell, at one point, he fuels certain spells with his affectionate feelings for Squirrel Girl. He cooks Verity dinner and adores video games. And he's shown to be pretty showy and dramatic. I mean, he's very clearly a theater kid. Theater kids are rarely subtle in their day to day. I've dated theater kids, and I can tell you that subtle isn't always quite in their vocabulary. Lol

I just can't with the Parent Trap. Like these horrible toxic people hated each other SO MUCH they were willing to never see one of their children FOREVER! And at no point did we get a scene of them like longing for their long lost daughter!

No scene of them secretly looking at baby pictures or something, the closest was them missing their old SPOUSE not their flesh and blood! They were totally like eh I have one twin, I'm sure it's the same! And then they were willing to just split them up again! Like peace I'll see you at Easter!

The nanny was more emotional about meeting the other twin than the parents were! She cried and held the other twin! Like I can't get over how she had the biggest reaction to the whole thing!

And these idiots think they could make it work for round 2 when nothing actually changed for them? Did she leave her fashion company in London, you can just pick up and move a company internationally with a snap of your finger? Did he leave his vineyard in Napa?

Now Frida is a very interesting combination, because Frida will get dressed up, she will wear traditional garb in a non-traditional way. She had her own sense of style, and she celebrated herself. In her darkness, you could see that in her dress when she cut her hair off and wore a suit—we were shocked. But we understood, because the great thing about doing something like Frida is that you had proof within both her words and paintings. Your tools were there. There is a trail of anger flowing through my bloodline, from my great-grandmother, to my grandmother, to my mother, to me.

you wear an ancestor's face. you look like a woman you'll never meet. in that mirror, there's thousands of you. and in the bath, when you look down, she looks back, shaking and deforming in the ripples as she lies beneath the surface.

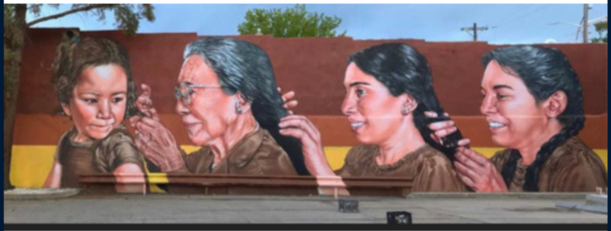
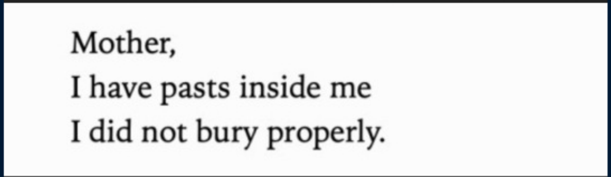
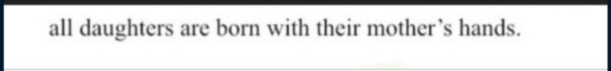
She remembers when she was younger and the type to read all the time, she read something about how your face is all the faces of your ancestors who came before you combined and she's not sure why, but to this day, it's scared her. Maybe it's the fear that one day she'll just be a ghost in someone else's appearance but she tries not to think about her likeness to her mother anymore.

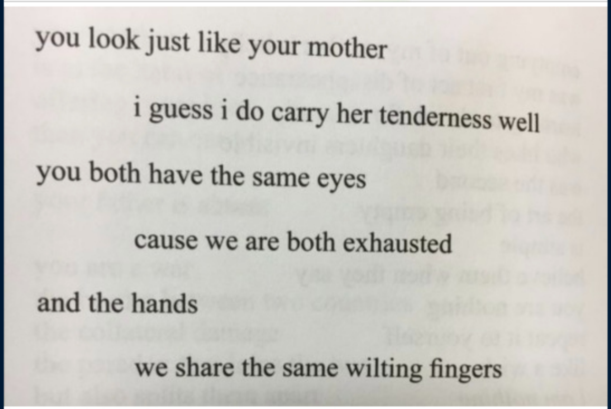




Mother,
I have pasts inside me
I did not bury properly.



all daughters are born with their mother's hands.



you look just like your mother
i guess i do carry her tenderness well you both have the same eyes cause we are both exhausted and the hands
we share the same wilting fingers and heartbreaking. But behind all your stories is always your mother's story, because hers is where yours begin."

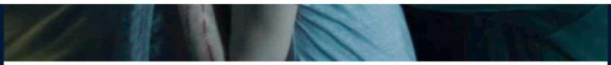
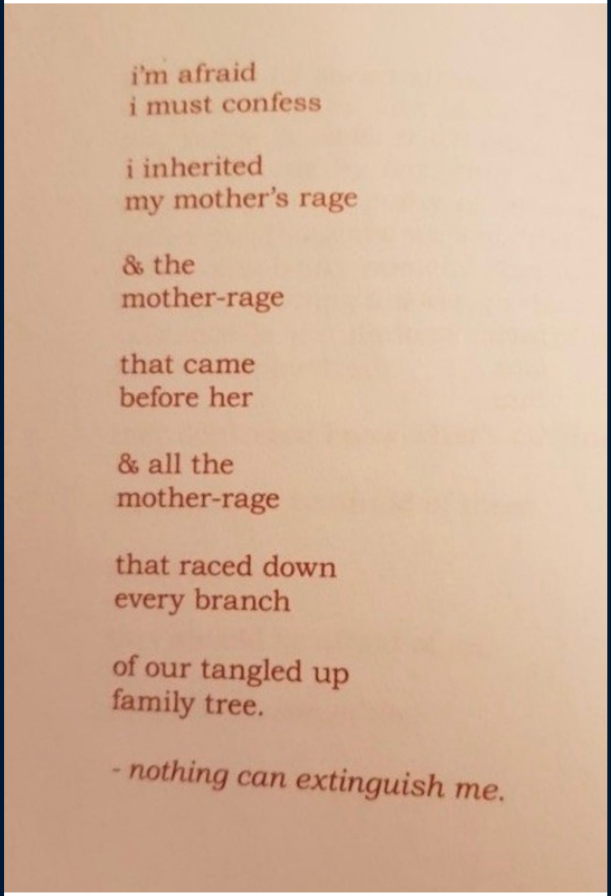
within your body

ancient remnants of love



“I look young
But inside I am old
And filled with the deaths
Of other people.”

We all have sensed the pain that our mothers carry. And all of us are suspicious to some degree that we are partly to blame for her pain. Therein lies the guilt. This



i'm afraid
i must confess

i inherited
my mother's rage

& the mother-rage

that came before her

& all the
mother-rage

that raced down
every branch

of our tangled up family tree.

mouserat-vevo

i tried to explain what generational trauma is to someone recently and they were like “oh so because something happened historically, you get to have issues about it now?” and no.... that's not what that is.

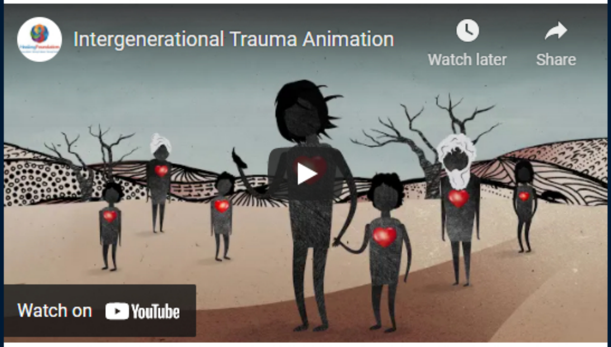
when i was in 8th grade, on my class trip to washington dc, we visited the holocaust museum. it's a wonderful, extensive, informative place, and it’s a beautiful tribute to the victims. as a jewish kid, i knew what the holocaust was. i’d faced antisemetism every day of my life, and will continue to do so. i knew what had happened to my ancestors not too long ago.

but when i stood in that museum. in the recreation of the cattle trains used to move us to the camps. in the recreation of an auschwitz cabin, staring at the map of the camp. when i saw the pile of shoes and jewelry taken from the victims. when i learned how their hair, so very much like mine, was cut for having texture. and how their teeth were pulled for the gold fillings. i had a panic attack.

it was embarrassing, but i was a shitty little 8th grader, and i tried to hide it. but I couldn’t breathe. it was like there was a band around my chest the entire time i was in the museum. i was surrounded by ghosts, by the whispers of emaciated men and trapped women and crying children.

what is generational trauma?

it’s the psychological idea that trauma can be passed down through multiple different ways. trauma can change you significantly, even rewrite neural pathways and physically change how you think. that, paired with the cycle of subconsciously sharing our trauma with our children, as well as mixing with the trauma we learn as we grow, leads to some really rough patches in our relationships with our identites.



this is a really great 4 minute video from the healing foundation about the trauma carried by indigenous people in Australia. tw for some really heavy topics, but all presented in a relaxed and serious environment.

well, honestly, i don’t know. it’s not like we’re gonna stop sharing our stories with our descendants, nor our histories. we can’t get rid of things related to our identities that give us our own trauma, the bigotry we face unfortunately isn’t going anywhere.

but being aware of your generational trauma is a good step. it’s not just being “sad” or “sensitive” to history. it’s our history still affecting us today. when your indigenous friends are made upset by discussions of colonization, when your black friends feel the weight of a millenia of racism placed on their shoulders, when your gay friends ask you to please stop using that word, when your trans friends see another historical figure deadnamed and misgendered, when your jewish friends can’t talk about the Shoah without their voices breaking.

so why the fuck are you lecturing us?

our murdered ancestors live on in us, in our eyes, our hearts. we are reminded of them constantly, made painfully aware of who we are and how many people hate us.

we were not supposed to survive, and if most of the world had their way, we wouldn’t have. (no, the allies were not heroes of wwii, you turned us away at your borders and continue to let us die from nazis today. if america had had the option, they wouldn’t have given a shit about jewish victims, but that’s a whole other essay i could write) it’s time to start acknowledging the past, acknowledging your generational trauma and the trauma of those around you. i’m not making up an excuse to “have issues”. at the time i’m writing this, october 2020, i’m 17. i have felt this weight my entire life, and i will continue to shoulder it, as will everyone else.

continue to shoulder it, as will everyone else.

my point is, maybe we can shoulder that weight together. maybe then it won't weigh us down as badly. we have solidarity, and we are tough, and resilient, and strong, and beautiful. your generational trauma is something to be aware of, but not ashamed of. we can do this—change the world for the better. we can break the cycle so our descendants don't feel as we do.

star-anise

My work generally, but especially transcribing recorded therapy sessions into text for my training, and learning about how to evaluate language for signs of trauma, taught me something valuable when it comes to writing: People relating their own raw trauma tend not to be good storytellers.

It goes against the novelist's entire art to depict a first recitation of trauma the way it happens, because we're taught to make theme, content, style, and character arc cohere simultaneously, in exactly the way real trauma stories generally don't the first few times..

One of the things that makes trauma traumatic is that it breaks down the brain's basic ability to work together to process memories. Instead of being wholly integrated and understood by the whole system, traumatic memories tend to be fractured and partitioned. The ways that memories, emotions, language, and physical sensations work together tend to be a little broken. If you can come out of an experience with the ability to accurately and movingly describe what it was like so that other people understand you, you're actually way less likely to be traumatized in the long run.

Thus, it's often really hard for people to speak easily about trauma, especially the first few times. Researchers of trauma have found that talking about a traumatic subject tends to make people's language disorganized–although someone may be eloquent on other topics, they often devolve into sentence fragments and abrupt shifts, floundering to find the words to express what they want to mean. Language often becomes vague and elliptical, or brutal and blunt. It often takes several attempts to express an idea or relate an event. Diction often parts ways with emotional content, so something emotionally devastating can be related as a funny joke, or something seemingly minor can be given a lot of weight and attention.

And as people speak, they're often so busy controlling their own physical sensations that they aren't giving a good "performance"–they might not coordinate their breathing enough to properly fuel their sentences; they might be overwrought; they might appear relaxed or preternaturally calm. (They may appear to be preternaturally calm but show physical signs of terror.) They often don't appear like whatever the hell we think traumatized people "should" sound like.

Talking about traumatic experiences can be helpful precisely because it allows us to re-work those fragments of trauma back into a coherent whole. Writing can be especially helpful because it offers a halfway-point; you can re-integrate language and memory without having to physically control yourself enough to speak. It's why therapists are such fans of journalling. However, it's useful to remember that unless your character also tends to do a lot of internal processing and language rehearsal inside their head, the first time they talk about something deeply painful, it probably won't read like prose, especially not deeply dramatic and emotional prose, and it probably won't be convincing to a skeptical audience.

My experience is that we often have to learn how to "perform" victimhood and make our stories socially acceptable–to pick up culturally specific ways of talking about our experiences that aren't natural outgrowths of trauma so much as they match what the people around us expect of trauma survivors.

What a fine adventure, isn't it brother?
I hate you, I hate you, I hate yooouuu!

I think some writers skip this over entirely because it can be a laborious process not conducive to a lively style and a fast-moving story. There are ways this can be worked around; the process of slowly constructing a coherent trauma narrative can be a plot all in itself. It can, in fact, make your work better. Just so long as you know how the process happens.

White witches are not persecuted. Modern witchcraft among white people is not what women were persecuted for during witchcraft trials. You being judged by monotheistic religions has nothing to do with the mass executions of innocent people, largely women, well before even your grandparents were born. I hate to tell you but most of those women didn't practice witchcraft. They were considered witches or under "the devil's spell" because of sickly partners, the death of their infants, false accusations by people who didn't like them, etc. You don't have centuries of generational trauma when the "oppression" of white witches is extremely modern.

Shame on @AvonInsider and any publication that allows this sort of abusive advertising. My timeline is full of women saying adverts like these are why they are afraid to be naked in front of lovers, or to wear a swimsuit. You are being robbed of your money and self esteem. 😡

The way this industry sells fear to (only) women about the inevitable effects of time and gravity, and a slowing metabolism, makes me feel sick. The corrective beauty industry is booming at an all time high, because they have ensured our self worth is at an all time low.

ok so some interesting facts about her :

She's partially deaf, she had battled anorexia as a teenager, she was a middle school English teacher and then a really successful British model, host, theatre actress and video jockey.

She has also battled and survived hypermobile Ehlers-Danlos syndrome, a car crash, mercurial poisoning, labyrinthitis and coeliac disease.

And obviously she's known for her activism and killer acting skills.

She's quite literally a queen.

Serious post I would like people to spread!

This is Naomi Schwartz, she is a 14-year-old girl from Palm Beach Florida who is battling a rare form of cancer which requires a bone marrow transplant. She is mixed race, her mother is a brown Puerto Rican woman and her father is Ashkenazi Jewish, and as a result, currently has no matches in her family or in bone marrow databases. Naomi's family ran a drive to try to find a match for her, but that's no guarantee she will find one. I thought I would use my platform here to encourage people or people you know, especially with a similar background to Naomi, to register on bethematch.org.

I don't usually add onto posts but I would like to say that I recently had a bone marrow transplant due to cancer as well. I learned a lot about bone marrow transplants due to this and it's something that was totally off my radar until I was in it. The Bone Marrow donor pool is extremely white. On average a white person has a 77% chance of finding a match in the pool, it drops significantly for people of different ethnicities. My specific "white european" genetics made my chance personally 93% and because my sister wasn't a match mine came from the registry and they were a "perfect" match, this literally saved my life. I hope dearly that Naomi can find a donor, I also hope that you consider sending a away for a kit if you can and especially if you can help widen the donor pool. It's super easy, and it means life or death for those of us handed a very difficult kind of cancer or other rare diseases.

This is from the be the match site giving the average stats for people by ethnicity:

Likelihood of finding a Matched Adult Donor on the Be The Match Registry®

by Patient Ethnicity*

African American or Black	23%
Asian or Pacific Islander	41%
Hispanic or Latino	46%
American Indian or Alaska Native	57%
White	77%

*Patients are most likely to match an adult donor of their own ethnic background.

Relevant to Naomi, It said in the article that people with a mixed ethnic background have a 15% chance of finding a donor match, also!

Please Help Me, I'm Desperate. - Dental Emergency Extended

Post Made: 05/29/2021

Hey everyone. My name's Jack, I'm a 22 year old transman living with my disabled wife, her family and our baby animals. I don't want to have to ask for help from anyone, but I don't have any family that can help me and I've received the most help and care from my family on tumblr than anywhere else.

I'm updating this post with the finished care plan and amount that I need, as well as the date so no one thinks the post is old. I'm desperate and don't have any other means to save myself from the pain me and my family are going through right now because of this. I have insurance, but they only cover 1000 dollars of emergency and has already been used.

I am in severe pain from all of the problems I have in my mouth. I just was treated for a tooth infection, but after examination they let me know I'm bordering on another severe infection in two of my teeth. I need TWO root canals still and have no way to pay for that, but they're warning me that I don't have a lot of time and need to be seen as soon as possible to avoid further infections. [In the pictures above, one of the plans is for the two root canals, and the other plan is to treat the amount of severe decay I have.] I also have IMPACTED wisdom teeth that need to come out soon, but I can't focus on that when there are other problems

I can't and don't expect the full cost from tumblr, because its a little under 6000 dollars in total and thats a lot. I need around 2000 to get what I need done, and that would prevent me from having another emergency extraction needed. I'm doing everything I can to earn the money on my own, I had been looking for a job but I can't even interview when I'm in this much pain and so for now we live off of a very fixed income.

My wife has been terrified since I've gotten the infection, she's unable to ever relax because of fear that I'm not going to be okay, and it's flaring up her epilepsy. It's affecting everyone around me, and I'm really just desperate for things to be okay. I've been taking care of my teeth, and they say that if I get these fixed I shouldn't run into any more problems. Please, I really am begging at this point, my entire body hurts. I can post receipts if needed, and anything I get WILL go to fixing these emergencies. I hope to be giving back as soon as I can, because anything helps. Even 1 dollar, it all adds up when someone decides to help. Spreading the word also helps more than I can say. Thank you so much.

curly-fried asked:

It kinda annoys me when people call robots (2005) socialist propaganda, because it paints replacing a bad capitalist with a good capitalist as a solution to horrible policies ruining lives instead of changing the system. Ik it's just a silly kids movie but imo it's a form of capitalist propaganda death2america answered:

that's basically how every remotely anticapitalist kids movie works. it's a critique of an issue under capitalism but the solution is always capitalism 2.0 or nothing really specific (like the end of wall-e)

death2america

what's interesting is there is children's media with a more consistently anticapitalist plot that, when turned into a movie, is changed to make you sympathize with the person causing harm AND has a nicer appeal. you could say "well it's a kids movie so it's not supposed to be sad", but 1. little kid me proudly cried at movies like wall-e so maybe you're a pussy and 2. there's nothing wrong with teaching kids a lesson that involves an upsetting topic so long as it's simple to understand and not done in a way that's fucking traumatizing (why some media uses analogies rather than directly covering certain events).

now, to give an example of what I mean by plots of movies being stripped of a more anticapitalist appeal: the 2012 lorax movie.

in the original lorax story, you only see the onceler's gloves and not him as a person because he's meant to represent human greed, not a particular character. in the 2012 movie the onceler ~~becomes a tumblr sexyman~~ is fully humanized and has, at the beginning, a fun personality and is kind to creatures around him. when his toxic family arrives they push him to change. so rather than an all-encompassing representation of consumerism and human greed, we're given individuals with different appearances and personalities that harm caused can be tied to. ironically, it's capitalist individualism--every issue under capitalism is tied to a few corrupt assholes, not the system at large. so, in the 2012 movie, you sympathize with the person who does the most damage, the onceler. you see him as a victim of his family's toxic expectations. the villain in the story you can't really sympathize with is o'hare, but his actions are portrayed in a ridiculous comic book villain way that appears far removed from reality even if not (like him singing "let it die", lol). this is a villain that, again, is not able to represent the flaws of humanity at large. he's just one crazy guy.

oh, and then there's the songs in this movie. the most well known song, "how bad can I be", wasn't actually the one originally being put in the movie. the original is called "biggering" and not only does it fucking slap musically, it includes lyrics about how greed and pride can corrupt a person (with the lorax talking to the onceler). another changed song is the opening song "thneedville", which contains a larger critique of consequences of consumerism and alludes to a more dystopian society than the one put in the movie. the original has lyrics like "can't see the sun, but we like it that way", implying the place would look smoggy and not bright and sunny. ALSO, o'hare's lyrics in the original song clarify that a natural resource (air) should be free--"I sell them something they should get for free". this is important because we've normalized the commodification of things like water which are natural resources as necessary as air to survive. saying air should be free is a pretty low bar, so that lyric probably should've stayed, lmao.

ANYWAYYY ~~I may or may not have used this post as an excuse to write paragraphs about one of my cringey interests, but hey, it's still on topic~~ if you say it's not that deep i'll kill you. the movie may have not been made more appealing as some sort of capitalist conspiracy, but watering it down was totally unnecessary and stripped it of its original message, something not uncommon in children's media, especially from large companies.

Why are teachers at all levels surprised when you take them at their word?

I just remembered a time when I was in middle school when I ran the mile while I had a cold and nearly collapsed and the coach asked me why I didn't tell her and I was like "You said you wouldn't take excuses without a note and I forgot to ask my dad for a note today" and she was surprised for some reason?

Also whenever I was doing bad in high school and college and the teacher or professor pulled me aside and asked me about some missed test or something I'd bring up that I was sick or had a panic attack or just forgot. And they'd ask me why I didn't ask for an extension or to reschedule and then I'd say "Uh, you said in the syllabus that you didn't do that." and every time they seemed surprised that I was following the rules and taking their threats seriously.

Like why does everyone set rules and then become super surprised when students take them seriously? Was I never supposed to follow the rules? Why then did people spend so much time telling me I should follow the rules if they're just a rough guideline?

I've always been a rule follower by nature and for some reason everyone has always been shocked by that. I'll follow rules to my own detriment. I'm not a trail blazer. I'm not someone that naturally questions authority. I had to be taught how to do that and I'm still not good at it. Why should it be expected of me to bend rules just so I can get by? Why does anyone assume that everyone knows when to bend the rules and when not to? I know I'm not an idiot. So why do people look at me like I am when I don't read their mind and know when they'll make an exception?

Anyway, she kicks ass and this shirt is cool.

I love in period dramas when something befalls a family and they must DOWNSIZE and they're like OH HOW WRETCHED, WE ARE REDUCED TO A COOK AND TWO SERVANTS AND A GROUNDSKEEPER IN THIS 5 BEDROOM COUNTRY HOUSE

(The servants have their own quarters separate from the 5 bedrooms obviously, ew peasants)
Then the heroine is like do not fret mama, I am sure we will make new friends and mama is like WE HAVE BUT ONE CARRIAGE AND 6 HORSES WE CANNOT AFFORD FRIENDS

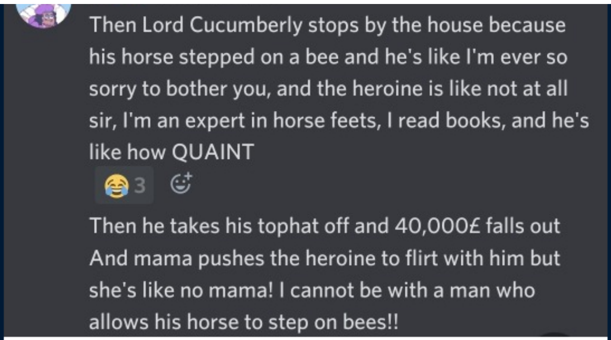
nic | handwrittenhello Today at 05:34
HOWEVER WILL WE HOST LAVISH BALLS NOW

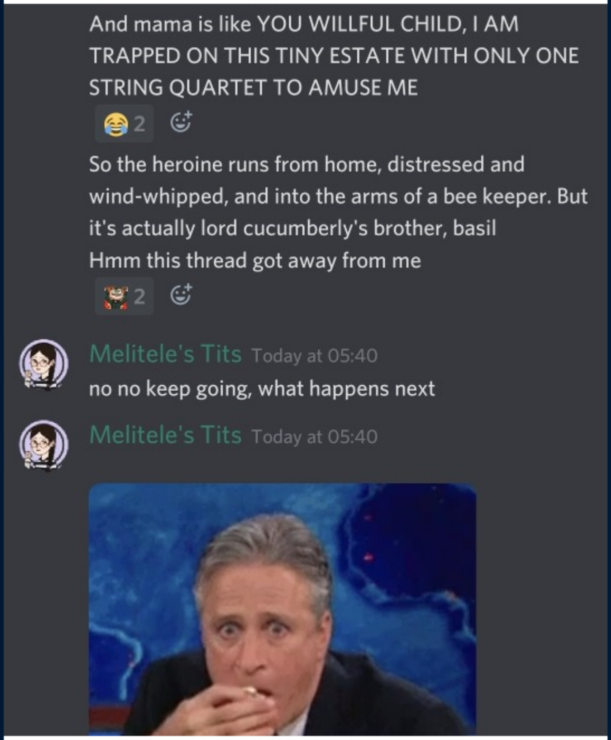
inber Today at 05:36



Then Lord Cucumberly stops by the house because his horse stepped on a bee and he's like I'm ever so sorry to bother you, and the heroine is like not at all sir, I'm an expert in horse feets, I read books, and he's like how QUAINT

😂 3

Then he takes his tophat off and 40,000£ falls out
And mama pushes the heroine to flirt with him but she's like no mama! I cannot be with a man who allows his horse to step on bees!!



And mama is like YOU WILLFUL CHILD, I AM TRAPPED ON THIS TINY ESTATE WITH ONLY ONE STRING QUARTET TO AMUSE ME

So the heroine runs from home, distressed and wind-whipped, and into the arms of a bee keeper. But it's actually lord cucumberly's brother, basil Hmm this thread got away from me

is basil kind to his bees

inber Today at 05:41
Well the heroine scolds him at first and is like how could you be careless with your bees, letting your brother's horse step on them!! You should be ashamed sir
And he says ma'am I beg of you, give me leave to explain

nic | handwrittenhello Today at 05:43
he has PTSD from the bee wars of 1870

inber Today at 05:43
And she says no!! I am to attend lord cucumberly's ball and I must put on at least 18 petticoats. Goodbye forever Basil watches her leave, distraught, and considers letting her go. But no! He must tell her!
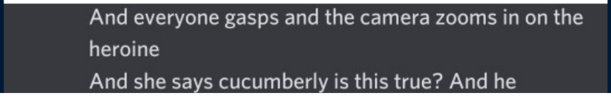
That night at the ball, Basil makes a loud entrance. Cucumberly says brother, I didn't know you were to attend, welcome
And Basil says brother, I didn't know that you'd STOLEN ONE OF MY BEES TO STING YOUR HORSE, UNTIL I COUNTED THEM

😂 3 😮 3



And everyone gasps and the camera zooms in on the heroine
And she says cucumberly is this true? And he stammers and goes no!! No, it's a falsehood

inber Today at 05:47
But Basil says if that is so, let us interview the horse!
So they bring the horse into the ball

nic | handwrittenhello Today at 05:48
does heroine know how to speak to horses on account of all the reading she does

inber Today at 05:48
Basil produces a jar containing a squashed bee and asks the horse, does this look familiar? And the horse neighs in distress and smashes through the french doors, into the night
Cucumberly is shamed and cannot show his face in Upper Shroplingshireton again
💀 3
And the heroine goes to see Basil to apologise and he says there is nothing to be sorry for.... honey
😂 3 🍯 3 🐝 3 🌿 2 😎 2
And they kiss and it turns out basil is a honey millionaire and all their fortunes are restored

one day some of you will actually go outside and go to pride and you're going to meet old black queens who refers to themselves as femme, you'll meet people from small towns who still use the word transsexual, you'll see that your local activist organization set up a stall about your local LGBT history that includes leather bar's history, you'll see lesbians in groups refer to themselves as "guys" and "boys", you'll see someone with breasts and pasties and little else have "he / him" painted on his chest, and you'll be so caught up with your terminally online attitude that instead of appreciating the wide diversity of people who exist in the LGBT community who are brave enough to share themselves you'll just be formulating posts and tweets in your head for when get home about how "problematic" it all was and it's honestly tragic

saltedsapphicly Follow

Once, back when I worked in an LGBTQIA dungeon, I encountered a significantly older person who remarked to me that they hadn't been to "this type of place" in decades. They struck up a conversation with me and told me how amazing it was to see an openly transexual youth such as myself. I asked them about their experiences with gender and they said "oh, well, I'm a bit male and a bit female. Men's and women's clothes, sometimes makeup in a suit, sometime fresh faced in a dress when I'm at home. You know, bisexual" Obv this puzzled me at first until I realized this person was using bisexual in a very, very, literal and old fashioned sense, as in, dual-sexed. Non-binary.

Y'all gotta understand there are generation gaps in the language we use and you open yourself up to a LOT of very interesting stories if you stop blocking off the past.

ittybittytatertot Follow

One of the biggest problems with modern community is the idea that (white) western, post 2000s LGBT vocabulary is the only correct way to speak about sexuality and gender.

Like the freak outs under pictures of protests from the 70s-90s because signs and shirts say faggot and dyke and queer, as if these words weren't a key part of identity and activism.

Beyond just English, I saw a couple people making fun of the term "gender x" in an anime...but why would a Japanese production adhere to English standards?

Or the way people talk about pronouns as if every language uses pronouns the same way as English.

It's just...it indicates a mindset that these words are objective and written in stone and western youth culture is always the most correct in a way that...feels icky. Diversity in people includes diversity of language.

demiboy and demigirl would be cool if you haven't done them before
TikTok

Caption: [A lot of y'all have requested to see the demi flag. So I decided to start off with demiboy and demigirl. Demigender is a gender identity that involves feeling a partial, but not a full a connection to a particular gender identity or the concept of gender.

Demigirls may include people that use she/her or they/them pronouns while demiboys may include people that use he/him or they/them pronouns. A demigirl or demiboy may also identify as nonbinary or transgender but demigender is also perfectly valid on its own.]

Note: People of any gender can use whichever pronouns they want. I think the video creator was trying to quickly simplify the concept of demigender which sort of erased nuances.

- corporations trying to profit off of queer people by showing their support for only one month of the year is bad

and

- it's fun to watch conservatives get pissed that they can't shop at target anymore because the big bad rainbows will corrupt their children :(

and

Here's something I never see discussed anywhere:

Disabled/chronically ill young people who are able to work but haven't always been able to (and may still have restrictions), and how that stops them from getting work even now.

It doesn't matter if they're able to do the work fine and they have all the necessary skills, because of how competitive the market is now there will always be at least one other candidate with more experience than they do. And this is simply because during an important period of their life when all their peers were out getting some work experience (even if it was in completely unrelated fields), they couldn't because they were ill. They may not even be able to do what all their peers consider something they can "fall back on" like waiting tables, because they physically can't. Disability/chronic illness stopped them from getting work then, and it stops them from getting work even when they can now, even when they excel in all other areas you want from an employee. And of course it can't fall under discrimination laws because no one is actively discriminating - no one is at fault - it's the screwed up economy we live in that's the problem, and there's not a damn thing we can do about it unless we can actually get some work experience that counts.

Loki Needs Its Own Version Of Endgame's Frigga Scene For His Redemption

Loki's mother could pave the way for redemption.

SCREENRANT.COM

my reaction to this article was basically a combination of some side-eye and "yeah you know what Loki should get to hang out with his mom," and then I got to this bit and burst out laughing, because her magical powers, also known as her eyeballs?? because he looked 1000% different than when she last saw him like five minutes ago?? y'all c'mon. I know the movie leaned on this with the whole "I see with more than eyes" thing but like. we don't have to pretend that wasn't ridiculous.

> With this new Loki variant having not yet experienced many of the same things as the original Loki has, there does still exist within him a chance for redemption akin to the profound journey Thor went on in Avengers: Endgame. This is shown when Thor encounters his mother, Frigga, and her magical powers confirm that he is not the version of Thor that exists in her own timeline.

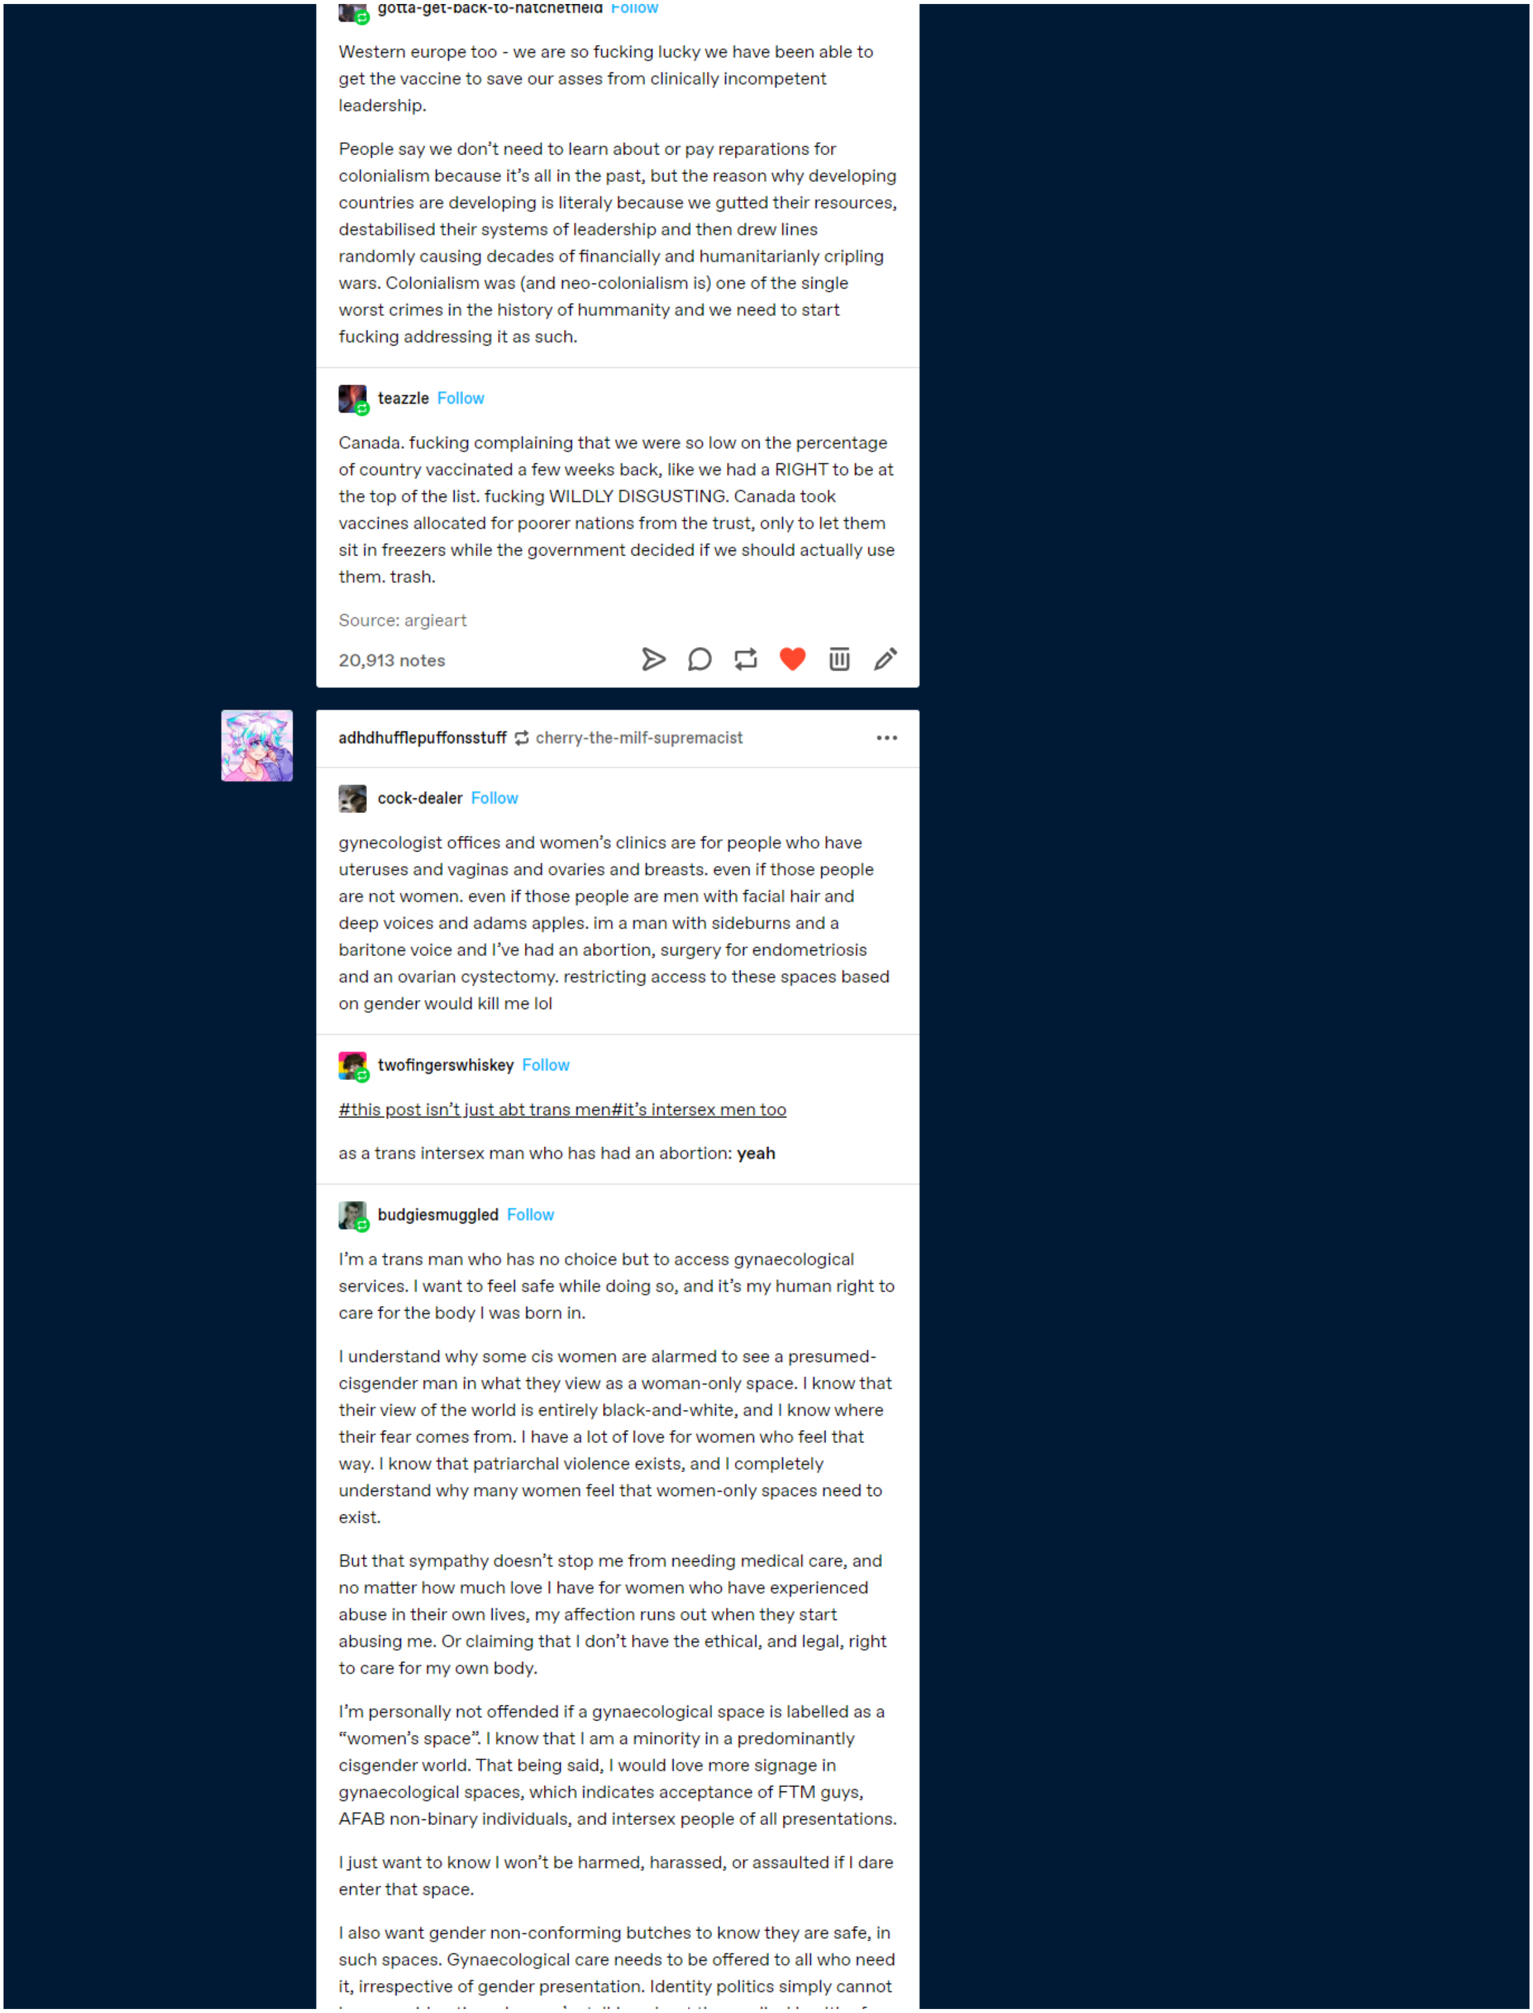
i hope americans know about the unjust, unfair system that allowed them to get vaccines so early. while young and healthy ppl in the us decide which day of the week is more convinient to get a shot, the majority of the world can't even secure vaccines for their elders.

it's not "effort" it's no "innovation". its just modern imperialism.



gotta-get-back-to-hatchetfield Follow

Western europe too - we are so fucking lucky we have been able to get the vaccine to save our asses from clinically incompetent leadership.

People say we don't need to learn about or pay reparations for colonialism because it's all in the past, but the reason why developing countries are developing is literaly because we gutted their resources, destabilised their systems of leadership and then drew lines randomly causing decades of financially and humanitarianly cripling wars. Colonialism was (and neo-colonialism is) one of the single worst crimes in the history of hummanity and we need to start fucking addressing it as such.

Canada. fucking complaining that we were so low on the percentage of country vaccinated a few weeks back, like we had a RIGHT to be at the top of the list. fucking WILDLY DISGUSTING. Canada took vaccines allocated for poorer nations from the trust, only to let them sit in freezers while the government decided if we should actually use them. trash.

gynecologist offices and women's clinics are for people who have uteruses and vaginas and ovaries and breasts. even if those people are not women. even if those people are men with facial hair and deep voices and adams apples. im a man with sideburns and a baritone voice and I've had an abortion, surgery for endometriosis and an ovarian cystectomy. restricting access to these spaces based on gender would kill me lol

#this post isn't just abt trans men#it's intersex men too

as a trans intersex man who has had an abortion: yeah

budgiesmuggled Follow

I'm a trans man who has no choice but to access gynaecological services. I want to feel safe while doing so, and it's my human right to care for the body I was born in.

I understand why some cis women are alarmed to see a presumed-cisgender man in what they view as a woman-only space. I know that their view of the world is entirely black-and-white, and I know where their fear comes from. I have a lot of love for women who feel that way. I know that patriarchal violence exists, and I completely understand why many women feel that women-only spaces need to exist.

But that sympathy doesn't stop me from needing medical care, and no matter how much love I have for women who have experienced abuse in their own lives, my affection runs out when they start abusing me. Or claiming that I don't have the ethical, and legal, right to care for my own body.

I'm personally not offended if a gynaecological space is labelled as a "women's space". I know that I am a minority in a predominantly cisgender world. That being said, I would love more signage in gynaecological spaces, which indicates acceptance of FTM guys, AFAB non-binary individuals, and intersex people of all presentations.

I just want to know I won't be harmed, harassed, or assaulted if I dare enter that space.

I also want gender non-conforming butches to know they are safe, in such spaces. Gynaecological care needs to be offered to all who need it, irrespective of gender presentation. Identity politics simply cannot be a consideration when we're talking about the medical health of people who, irrespective of the label they identify with, have uteruses and vaginas and ovaries and breasts. It's life and death.

also with skincare, there’s way more product waste an emphasis on “trying something out to see!”

with makeup, if you try out eyeliner and hate how it looks on you, you know that trying a different eyeliner won’t change that much, the experience and result of Wearing Eyeliner doesn’t vary that much between brands and price point but with skincare if X highly rated product doesn’t work for you, you’re encouraged to try this Y alternative, but also you need to wait atleast 3 months to judge if it’s truly working, and if it makes you breakout when you start that’s just your skin “purging”, but also make sure to refrigerate your products and keep it in a fridge and rebuy it every 4 months andbtw, people acting like trump himself is going to storm up to the white house leading a coup are so fucking dumb. his supporters ALWAYS do the work for him. he's smart for this, actually, because he doesn't get in legal trouble for the actions of his supporters when they're the ones who break the law.

so you have a bunch of dumbasses risking their lives to make a guy president, who, like tons of other politicians, does not give a fuck about them in the first place.
